Can we as a church have a new conversation about sexuality and gender?

To discover the truths about sexuality and gender and to heal our communities, we need to rediscover the longings for connection with God and each other that are embedded not just in our souls, but in our very bodies.

At this one-day conference, explore the meaning of sexuality and gender in the life of the church and experience a diverse set of practical workshops by local leaders.

Come reimagine and revive the Church's witness as a healthy and flourishing family that looks increasingly like Jesus!

Sankofa at Home

The next stop on our Sankofa at Home journey is the Arthur and Edith Lee House in South Minneapolis.

In June 1931, Arthur and Edith Lee purchased a home at 4600 Columbus Ave S. Upon moving in that July, the neighborhood association offered to purchase the home from the Lees, who were Black, for $300 more than the family had paid in an attempt to keep the family out of the neighborhood.

When the family refused to sell, violence ensued. A crowd numbering between 3,000-6,000 people surrounded the house nightly, with many yelling taunts or throwing rocks at the house.

Violence was not the only tool used in an attempt to keep Black residents out of neighborhoods. Learn more about how racially restrictive housing covenants and redlining impacted housing around the Twin Cities.
